

Summary

This lecture covers the principles and techniques for presenting data in tabular form. Students will learn how to organize and summarize both qualitative and quantitative data using frequency distribution tables and other structured formats. Key components of a table, such as title, headings, row and column labels, and totals, are emphasized to ensure clarity and readability. Examples from health and social research are used to demonstrate proper table design and presentation.